Let's take a look at a few different ways to use adjectives. Let's start with a simple adjective to describe someone: funny There are different ways we can use this word to describe a person. If we simply want to describe the person directly, we can say: She's funny. or She's a funny woman. There isn't much difference between these sentences. The only difference is that you have the freedom to use different words to describe the woman in the second example. She's a funny person. She's a funny friend. She's a funny boss. But what if you don't know this person? What if you just have the feeling that she might be funny? The first thing to ask yourself is this: What gives you this feeling? Is it about her appearance or just a general feeling? If it's a general feeling, we can say: She seems funny. But if it's about her appearance (she might be a clown), then we can say: She looks funny. or She looks like a funny person. Remember: she looks + adjective she looks like + (adjective) noun Remember these adjectives forever! Download the free PDF cheat sheet with all these adjectives and more! First, students match each word to a food and drink picture and write the word underneath. Students then write a shopping list of 10 items using the food and drink. Next, in pairs, students take it in turns to say "This is my shopping list. Circle the food and drink items I say". The student then reads their 10 shopping list items to their partner who listens and circles the corresponding pictures on their worksheet. Students score a point for each correct food or drink item they circle. The student with the most points wins. In this food and drink Find Someone Who activity, students ask and answer present simple questions about eating and drinking habits. Students start by reviewing prompts on the worksheet and forming the present simple questions they need to ask to do the activity, e.g. 'What do you usually eat for breakfast?' Students then answer the questions and write down their answers. Next, students go around the class asking and answering the questions to find people with the same answers. When a student finds someone with the same answer, the two students write down each other's names. Finally, students give feedback to the rest of the class on what they found out. In this food and eating habits activity, students ask and answer food-related questions.
